Ss

S, s /ɛs/.

The nineteenth letter of the modern English alphabet and the eighteenth of the ancient Roman one, derived from a Semitic (Phoenician) character, which represented a voiceless sibilant, /s/, /ʃ/. Mod. English pronunciation is according to the following general rules: S is pronounced /s/ at the beginning of a word or of the second elem. of a compound, and when doubled or in contact with a voiceless consonant; between vowels, and when phonetically final, a single s is usu. pronounced /z/. However, there are many anomalies, esp. in words derived from Latin or Greek: e.g. absurd, observe, evasive, dissolve, possess. In some words mod. English has /ʃ/, /ʒ/, developed from earlier English /sj/, /zj/, written either as s (before diphthongal u) or as si, which when rapidly pronounced are similar to /ʃ/, /ʒ/: e.g. sure, sugar, censure, mission, treasure, evasion. In a few words adopted from Old French S is silent, as in aisle, isle. Pl. S's, Ss, ss, /ˈɛsɪz/. See also ESS noun[1].

▸I 1 The letter and its sound.

s-aorist PHILOLOGY an aorist formed in certain Indo-European languages by adding s and the ending to the verbal stem.

English usage according to the following rules (cf. -S[1]): (i) /ɪz/ after a sibilant or affricate, -es being added if the verb is not spelled with a final silent e, as grazes, lunches, places, pushes; (ii) /z/ after a vowel or voiced consonant other than /z, ʒ, dʒ/, -es being added in certain cases when the verb is spelled with final o, as dies, fades, goes, lassoes, rubs, wallows; (iii) /s/ after a voiceless consonant other than /s, ʃ, tʃ/, as bakes, cuts, puffs, wants.

– NOTE: Verbs with final y after a consonant generally form the 3rd person sing. in -ies, as dry, dries, hurry, hurries, try, tries.

-s /s, after vowel or voiced consonant z/ suffix[3] (not productive).

[ORIGIN Old English -es masc. and neut. genit. sing. ending.]

Forming adverbs from nouns, adjectives, and (later, by analogy) adverbs, as afterwards, besides; (with changed spelling) hence, once. In later use some words were identified with -S[1] from their formal coincidence with pl. nouns, as days, mornings, needs, Sundays.

-s /s, after vowel or voiced consonant z/ suffix[4].

[ORIGIN After -S[1].]

Forming nicknames (as Carrots, Fats) or pet names (as Babs, ducks, Pops).

-s suffix[5] see -'S[1] 2.

-'s /ɪz, s, z, (see below)/ suffix[1]. In sense 2 -s /z, s/.

[ORIGIN formed as -S[3].]

1 Forming the possessive case of nouns, in mod. English usage according to the following rules (cf. -S[1], -S[2]): (i) /ɪz/ following a sibilant or affricate, as fox's, goose's, witch's; (ii) /z/ following a vowel or voiced consonant other than /z, ʒ, dʒ/, as children's, dog's, girl's, tiger's, women's; (iii) /s/ following a voiceless consonant other than /s, ʃ, tʃ/, as book's, calf's, cat's, sheep's.

2 (-s.) (Not productive.) Forming the possessive prons. hers, its, ours, theirs, yours.

– NOTE: In certain instances there is no change in pronunciation for the possessive, and its written representation is by an additional apostrophe only: (i) pl. nouns spelled with final s, as books', cats', girls', tigers'; (ii) a few nouns with final sibilant in fixed phrs., as for conscience' sake, for goodness' sake. An additional apostrophe only is also usual with the possessive of classical names of more than one syllable spelled with final s, as Moses', Venus', Socrates', Xerxes'; English names with final s may take either 's /ɪz/ or an apostrophe only, as Charles's or Charles', Dickens's or Dickens'.
